Are there any fiber optic cable manufacturers in Namibia

Key Takeaways

Namibia does not have local fiber optic cable manufacturers; all fiber optic cables are imported.

Namibia relies entirely on imported fiber optic cables for its telecommunications and infrastructure projects. According to industry sources, the country manufactures no optical cable locally, meaning every meter of single-mode fiber, closures, and splice trays is brought in from abroad . The demand is primarily driven by major carriers and utilities, such as Telecom Namibia, which has implemented extensive FTTx projects across the country.

Local Companies and Suppliers

While there are no manufacturers, several companies distribute and install fiber optic cables in Namibia:

• Swanib Cables: A leading distributor of electric and fiber optic cables, serving the mining, utilities, and telecom sectors. They supply high-quality imported fiber optic cables and related equipment .

• Powerline Fibre: Specializes in fiber optic installations for residential, commercial, and business properties. They provide end-to-end services including planning, acquisition, and installation, but do not manufacture cables .

• Age Technologies: A South African-based supplier operating in Namibia, sourcing fiber optic cables from global manufacturers like Rockwell, Schneider, and Siemens . Implications

For businesses or projects in Namibia, this means that all fiber optic cable procurement involves international suppliers, and local companies focus on distribution, installation, and project management rather than production. Understanding the specifications required by network owners is crucial, as cable types vary for backbone, feeder, and drop applications . In summary, while Namibia has a robust network of distributors and installers, fiber optic cable manufacturing is not currently established within the country, and all products are imported to meet local demand.
