Riyadh Cables is the largest cable manufacturer in the Middle East, headquartered in Riyadh with regional affiliates in the UAE and Iraq . Established in 1984, the company produces a wide range of cables, including fiber optic, low/medium/high voltage, and hybrid cables for 5G base stations. Riyadh Cables is notable for its large-scale production capacity, enabling it to supply national backbone networks and major clients like the Saudi Electricity Company (SEC) and STC. The company holds all major certifications, including Aramco approvals for hazardous environments .

Bahra Electric

Founded in 2008, Bahra Electric is part of the CPC group and focuses on fiber optic and electrical cables . The company emphasizes vertical integration, manufacturing its own PVC and conduit materials to control the supply chain. Bahra Electric has contributed to major expansion projects in Makkah and Madinah, leveraging modern German machinery to ensure consistent quality .

Other Notable Manufacturers

Additional companies in Saudi Arabia include Bright Wires, Systematic Energy Company (SECO), and Global Business Solutions Co. LTD (GBS), which provide fiber optic network design, splicing, testing, and structured cabling solutions . These firms support telecommunications and data center infrastructure, offering specialized components and services for regional connectivity projects.

Summary

Saudi Arabia's optical cable industry is dominated by MEFC, Riyadh Cables, and Bahra Electric, each offering unique strengths: MEFC for technical precision and customization, Riyadh Cables for large-scale infrastructure projects, and Bahra Electric for integrated supply chain solutions. These manufacturers serve telecom, industrial, government, and energy sectors, ensuring high-quality fiber optic solutions across the MENA region .
