Steel is durable and suitable for heavy-duty applications, while aluminum and fiberglass are lighter and corrosion-resistant, affecting cost accordingly .

• Tray Design and Dimensions: Prices vary depending on whether you choose ladder, perforated, or solid-bottom trays, as well as the width, height, and length of the tray. Custom lengths beyond standard 3m or 6m sections may increase costs .

• Customization and Accessories: Custom features such as elbows, tees, splice plates, supports, and powder coating or galvanizing add to the overall price. Complex routing or high-capacity trays for industrial installations typically cost more .
